

Processing

My name is Manon. I just finished my Master's thesis.

Before I started to write my thesis I wanted to make sure that my research results were consistent with the information I had retrieved during my literature search. Fortunately, my results were consistent and I did not have to do any additional literature research.

After this final check I started to write my thesis, using the literature I had found. I was not completely sure how to draw up a well-balanced and consistent report or how to incorporate the literature. For example, I knew that there are specific standards for referring to literature, but I needed to know more.

In this part you will learn how important it is to check the consistency of the information you had found and how to incorporate literature in your writing. You will also learn how to draw up a proper literature list, how to cite or paraphrase, and how to avoid plagiarism.

Tip: make your life easier and use reference management software like EndNote or Zotero to store and process your literature references!